

EASTER IS COMING

"Notes, Notices & Small Mysteries from Duckdom"

A QUIET MOMENT IN DUCKDOM

This morning, Duckdom felt different.

Not in a big way...
nothing had changed...

The blossoms from the parade still lingered along the lane,
caught in corners, resting on windowsills,
as if the village itself wasn't quite ready to let them go.

Wormy says this always happens after a celebration...
when the noise fades, the real magic has time to settle.

SOMETHING STRANGE KEVIN NOTICED

Kevin noticed something odd today.

The signpost at the edge of the Green...
the one that usually points quite confidently toward "Market", "Hall", and "Waterhole"...

...was pointing somewhere else.
Not wildly wrong.
Just... slightly off.

As if it had quietly changed its mind overnight.

Kevin didn't touch it.

He just sat for a while,
watching it...

as if it might explain itself.

TURBO'S TAKE OF THE WEEK

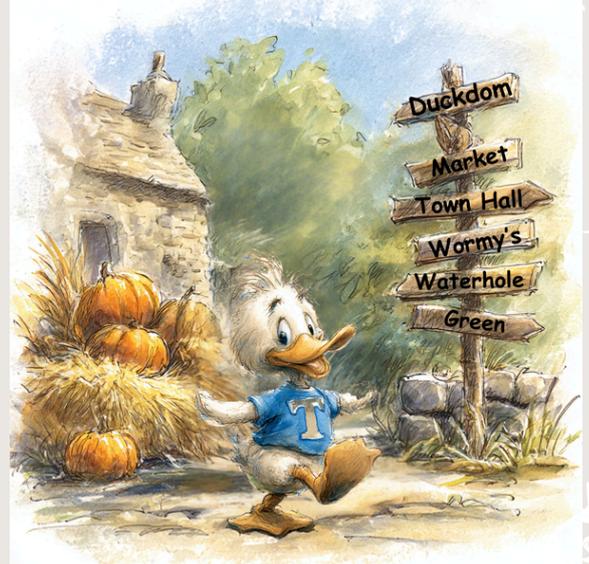

Turbo says:

"If a sign points somewhere new...
it's probably because there's something worth seeing there."

He then immediately marched off in the wrong direction,
confident as ever.

No one has seen him since breakfast.

(We assume he's fine.)

A TINY THING TO LOOK FOR

Today, look for something that seems slightly out of place.

Not broken.
Not wrong.

Just... not quite where you expected it to be.

A feather on a doorstep.
A stone in the middle of a path.
A chair turned just slightly away.

Sometimes those are the things worth noticing.

A Story to Begin

While walking home,
you notice something small sitting where it shouldn't be.

It hasn't been dropped.
It hasn't been lost.

It feels... placed.

What is it?
And who left it there?

FROM THE DUCKDOM SHELF

If you're just discovering Duckdom...

'Turbo's Duckdom' is where it all begins.

A little village.
A curious duck.

And a world that's only just starting to unfold.

You can explore it here

UNTIL NEXT WEEK...

Duckdom will be here...
as it always is...

just slightly shifting,
just slightly changing,

and always leaving a few clues behind.
